OBITUARY.

MRS. MATTHE PARKER ANDERSON. Steadily and noiselessly came death into our country on Sunday, the 3rd day of April. Thus passed tranquilly away one of the loveliest of women, and yet so retired had been her life for the last months of her residence in Charlottesville, that few persons had been privy to make her acquaintance, and only a small circle of devoted relations and intimate friends were aware of the great loss sustained, in art circles especially, by the departure from earth of this rarely gifted woman and devoted art student.

As ardent in religion, as in everything else to which she gave her affections, she had no fear of death, and would talk familiarly of its approach, as that of a friendly angel to usher her into the presence of her Saviour.

Mrs. Anderson was indeed a rarely beautiful woman, but her real attraction proceeded from high qualities of head and heart. There was a child-like innocence and truthfulness in her cordial address that were charming in the extreme, and hardly now to be thought of without deep emotion.

THE MILITARY PAGEANT. The first military pageant, headed by the Marine Band, formed on Seventeenth street, extending their line to the West gate of the White House. The artillery were parked along the outskirts of Lafayette Square, which separates Arlinton from the White House, and their guns and caissons stretched the full length of the south side of the Treasury. The cavalry, with their dark blue uniforms, helmets and yellow plumes, the artillery, with their deep-blue tunics, relieved by brilliant red trimmings and their helmets crowned with crimson plumes; the marines, with light blue uniforms, trimmed with red, and the Marine Band in their gorgeous parade-dress of the crimson and gold lace, made up the brilliant display of color and pageantry.

Major-General Thomas J. Rodger in command; next, General Lamont, and Secretary Herbert and Smith, and Postmaster-General Wilson, and then Secretary Herbert, Smith and Morton.
